HIS CHRISTMAS CAROL

By ADELAIDE HAZELTINE

CHAPTER I

ON the wide main floor far below

Carol Fairfield could hear a steady click of cash registers and that peculiar melody played by the shuffle of hundreds of feet. The smell of gift perfumes mingled with the odor of burning tapers. The hum of voices rose and fell in an orchestra of sound.

It was Christmas at Dearborn's, The People's Store.

But in the balcony office which had housed the management for fifty golden years there was only a breathlessness, a hush.

Carol said, "Is he—oh, Bill!" The red-coated figure straightened up, pushed white rayon whiskers impatiently from his face, leaving the body of Santa Claus grotesquely draped about the person of Bill Reece.

"Yes, Carol, he's dead!"

She pressed her hands against her mouth to suppress a choking gasp. She must not make a scene. As his secretary, Carol knew Andrew Dearborn would expect business to go on. Business as usual. He would not want even the end of his full and kindly life to interrupt the gaiety of Christmas shoppers.

"Dearborn's is for the people," he often told her. "All the people. Carol. Customer and employee alike. Not run merely to take their money. But to serve their welfare. Where efficiency experts to the contrary, sentiment plays a part."

And for fifty years he had made it so. This policy had built Dearborn's from a small one-story building to the great emporium of activity it was this December morning. Mr. Dearborn had made money, yet incidentally, above all he had served his public.

The store had been his inspiration in life. It would be his monument in death.

"What shall we do?" Carol whispered huskily. Her blue eyes were widened in distress. The pale oval of her face framed by a shining halo of brown hair was lovely even in grief. One small, manicured hand swept over her forehead and smoothed the soft, already perfect pompadour.

Bill put his arm around her shoulders, urged her to sit down. "Take it easy, Carol. I'll phone the doctor."

She heard him dial the number and speak quickly, very softly. Then he came back to her side. "He was a swell boss, Carol," he said as they gazed at the motionless grayed head.

She reached for Bill's hand. Big, good Bill. How calm he was! He had thought of Mr. Dearborn almost as a father, yet he controlled his shock. That was his way. Never excited. Matter of fact. Assistant in the display department when he wasn't playing Santa Claus. President of the employees' store organization. He was her sort. She liked him. Sometimes she was tempted to believe that liking was enough. But her heart rebelled.

She wanted love. The kind that was a shining thing. The kind—she thought of it—the kind she cherished for Andy Dearborn, playboy son of the man who lay here dead.

The doctor came then, bustled himself with Mr. Dearborn's still form. When he looked up his eyes

It was Christmas at Dearborn's, but in the balcony office there was only a breathlessness. Carol said, "Is he—oh, Bill!" He pushed Santa Claus whiskers impatiently from his face. "Yes, Carol, he's dead!"

told them what Carol already knew. Andrew Dearborn had died of an acute heart attack. He had known he would. Four months ago this very doctor warned him to expect it any day.

"Is his son in town?" the doctor asked. Luckily, Carol knew he was sitting the Dearborn yacht in the southern seas. Perhaps right now lying in the warm tropical sun with Linda Julian. Linda with her sleek, smooth beauty and her cool, calculating eyes. After his money, everyone said. It didn't seem to matter to Andy. She liked to play and so did he. They made a perfect pair.

"Better try to locate him," the doctor was saying. "There's no one else."

"I'll find him," Carol promised. Men in black came at last and slipped Andrew Dearborn away, carrying the long stretcher to the freight elevator and out the rear door with only a few of the most curious aware that anything but Christmas business was in progress.

Carol's heart ached as she saw him taken thus for the last time from his store. She blinked back tears.

When she and Bill returned to the balcony together, she said, "We'll have to tell Mr. Herrick. He's next in charge. I hope he won't announce it until closing time. It will upset everybody."

"We'll have to tell him," Bill agreed. "It won't mean much to him. He hasn't worked with Mr. Dearborn as long as we have."

"We've been with him a long time, Bill. There was gratitude in her voice.

They found Mr. Herrick at his desk. He was assistant manager of the store and made the most of the job. He was a large man with bushy blond hair and a belligerent jaw. He protruded below an aquiline nose. He had small, greedy eyes. He coveted authority. He worshiped power. He had always wanted more than both Mr. and Mrs. Dearborn gave him. He was unapologetically greedy.

He granted a greeting to Carol and Bill, finished signing some letters before he sat back and waited.

BILL cleared his throat. Carol sat forward in her chair. "We've come to tell you," Bill began, finding it difficult to express himself. "Mr. Herrick, we want to tell you Mr. Dearborn has had a heart attack."

"He has?" Mr. Herrick snapped. "Didn't know he ever had them."

Ruth Collins' Job Is Helping Women Lawbreakers

By ADELAIDE KERR
AP Feature Service Writer

Ruth Collins' job is helping women who have broken the law. She is head of New York's House of Detention. Into her window-barracked office in the last 10 years have come more than 50,000 women. They await trial or have been already convicted of such misdemeanors as petty larceny, alcoholism, prostitution or disorderly conduct.

I asked her to tell me the real cause behind their crack-ups—and got a surprising answer. "The chief cause is ego that has run amok," she said. "Of course the obvious causes are conditions: the women nearly all share—poverty, lack of education and a lack of stabilized home environment. Because of those they grow embittered and develop a ruthless defensive I-come-first attitude. But behind that is a great longing to excel in something, to be looked up to and to secure affection for themselves."

One of the most difficult women we ever had was a Slav, who quarreled with everybody, no matter where we put her. Finally, at her own suggestion, we got her materials to make lace as she had done in the Balkans. She changed completely and became one of the most tractable and helpful women in the house. She was doing something better than anyone else and getting recognition for it."

Under Miss Collins' direction the women who come to the House of Detention are examined and cleaned up physically, then put to work in some institutional job which should equip them to earn their living. They also attend classes in English, nutrition, hygiene and other subjects and have a chance at music and the library's books. More than half of those who have served a sentence have left to begin new lives.

Mrs. Dorothy Ellsworth works to prevent the kind of crack-ups in women's lives that might lead to the House of Detention. She counsels and helps girls who are hungry and jobless in New York or are faced with unmarried motherhood.

Mrs. Ellsworth is Executive Secretary of the New York branch of the Church Mission of Help's Youth Consultation Service—a national organization with 18 branches. Into the old brownstone house where she works more than 1,000 girls from 16 to 25 come yearly for help.

Among them are college graduates, orphaned, released from institutions who have no understanding of life outside their girls from broken homes or from homes where parents were too strict. Many are run-aways, but the average is a girl from rural or mining district who was not happy at home or who needs to contribute to the family support.

Under Mrs. Ellsworth's guidance they are given vocational tests, outfit with clothes, placed in a "shelter" or club until they have been helped to find a job and can take care of themselves again. The unmarried mothers are helped until their babies are born and they have found jobs.

"Much of the trouble these girls masquerading as another man and fooling his wife, it's the gal this time who doubles in glamor and makes a morally unfaithful fool of her husband."

For years, Hollywood has been getting past its own Hays Office censorship (as it did with "Two-Faced Woman") by having various improprieties and attempts at adultery committed by people who—surprise! surprise—were legally married all the time.

Done Before
The funny part now is that Metro did get away with a similar situation only a few weeks ago. The principals were Nelson Eddy and Rise Stevens. The movie was called "The Chocolate Soldier," although it admittedly was taken outright, without even the old switcheroo, from "The Guardsman."

Censorship takes an awful toll from the more optimistic studios. Metro paid a whopping sum for "Panama Hattie," which as a Broadway hit dealt with the embarrassing obstacles encountered by a virtuous Sadie Thompson among the sailors in the Canal Zone. As a picture, it now is being returned to the sound stages for extensive and expensive retakes, added scenes and general remodeling.

Trouble was that after whittling out all the objectionable parts, they had no story left—just six songs by Ann Southern and some comedy skits involving Red Skelton.

STAMP NEWS

THE wrecked American Embassy in Warsaw is pictured on the stamp above, one of a set of eight denominations, issued by the Polish government-in-exile. The set will be valid for domestic or international postage when applied to letters mailed on ships flying the Polish flag, or in designated post offices in England and later in Russia and Egypt, where Polish soldiers are stationed. No additional postage will be required on the letters; these stamps will carry them as though they bore postage of the countries in which they are mailed.

The sixth stamp of a series of eight depicting South Africa's war effort bears a picture of a tank and an armored car. It is a 1-shilling brown. Two more stamps, a half-penny to honor the infantry and 1 1/2 p for the air force, will be issued to complete the series.

New issues: The Netherlands Indies has released a series of semi-postals issued to benefit the Indonesian Association Moehammadiah, an organization which cares for indigent Mohammedans. . . . Germany has issued a stamp bearing a portrait of Hitler for use in occupied Poland.

have could be avoided with more understanding at home," Mrs. Ellsworth told me. "Take the unmarried mothers, for instance. The majority of them tell an 'ugly duckling story.' They were ignored for a sister who was prettier or brighter. So the first man who showed them attention had an inside track. They often say, 'He was the only one who seemed to take an interest in me.' Incidentally, there has been a slight increase in the number of unmarried mothers we have handled recently."

"Another frequent cause of a girl's break with home is her parents' failure to recognize what I call an adolescent's 'crazy quilt emotional pattern.' When young people mature physically they need to mature psychologically, too. They need to make a normal break from complete parental direction. But an adolescent isn't consistent. She may feel and act quite dependent in the morning—and then want to be independent in the evening."

"But adolescence is almost too late for a parent to begin to be understanding. The real work has to be done in childhood. Treating children alike. Giving them the way security that comes from the feeling they are wanted and loved. We have found that with understanding and patience, we can get most of the girls started in really worthwhile lives."

Harrison in Hollywood

Several Sides to 'Two-Faced Woman'

HOLLYWOOD — There is surprisingly little wallowing in the high places of M-G-M over the condemnation by the Legion of Decency of the new Greta Garbo film, "Two-Faced Woman."

The church censors certainly plucked a chestnut out of the fire for the studio, and if the group were any less independent and resolute I should suspect that it might have been influenced by protests slyly planted by busy little Metro-gnomes.

The idea of a movie company starting a campaign of shocked whispering against one of its own pictures certainly is not without precedent. Even the lurid catch-lines in studio-prepared advertisements are intended to convince fans that most films are pretty spicy and daring. Sensation-seekers may not be impressed.

Some Favor Shelving
The Garbo picture, though, is rather a special case. In this instance, the Legion of Decency's action came at a time when Metro may have wanted to hold back the film for revision and retakes before putting it into general release. I have talked with several studio people who saw it, and some said frankly that it is a poor and generally disappointing effort. Two said that it should have been shelved for the preservation of Miss Garbo's artistic reputation. All said that as far as morally objectionable aspects of the picture are concerned, they were mystified as to why it was singled out from among many recent racy comedies for condemnation.

"Two-Faced Woman" was not pre-screened in Hollywood, and I have not seen it. But I do know the story, and I was not being merely metaphorical in an earlier reference to it as a chestnut. It is essentially Ferenc Molnar's 30-year-old play "The Guardsman" after being given what Hollywood calls "the old sex switcheroo." That is, instead of a husband
